A young teen presents with an acne outbreak that is uncharacteristic for her. What are the clues to the diagnosis in the PMH?

Adolescence can be a period of extreme duress for some teens. The 14-year-old girl we are about to meet is coping with physical, emotional, and environmental stressors, but acne had never been a problem, until now.

Follow this short case presented by Dr Jonathan Schneider and test your diagnostic skills. Good luck. Suggested reading, below.

Recommended reading

Source URL:

Links: